Testimony of Rep. Thom Harnett introducing LD 1251 An Act To Make Agricultural Workers and Other Workers Employees under the Wage and Hour Laws before the Joint Standing Committee on Labor and Housing

Good morning, Senator Bellows, Representative Sylvester and members of the Labor and Housing Committee. My name is Thom Harnett and I represent the residents of District 83, which includes the Town of Farmingdale and the City of Gardiner. I am here today to introduce LD 1251, An Act to Make Agricultural Workers and Other Workers Employees under the Wage and Hour Laws.

I am here to talk with you about farm workers again. However, I am not going to review the history of how farm workers have routinely, specifically and intentionally been excluded from the protections and benefits contained in state and federal law that all other workers enjoy.

I am also not going to review how farm workers, most of whom are black, brown, Latino and Native American, being treated as "less than" has its origins in a tragic racially scarred segment of our history that saw people of color treated with disdain and left out when laws were enacted.

I am going to talk about the modern-day consequences of how that troubling history continues to result in farm workers being denied the ability to earn the state mandated minimum wage and overtime benefits in Maine.

Under current Maine labor law, in 2019, farm workers, with one very limited exception, are not considered employees under wage and hour laws. As a result, they are not protected by Maine's minimum wage and overtime laws found at 26 M.R.S. § 664 (1) and (3).

While almost every other working person in Maine has been guaranteed automatic increases in the minimum wage beginning in 2017, and continuing through 2020 and beyond, farm workers again find themselves excluded from those legally assured increases. While voters spoke clearly in increasing the minimum wage at the ballot box and workers throughout Maine celebrated, farm workers were not invited to the party and once again were left on the outside looking in. Their only guaranteed minimum wage is the current federal minimum wage of $7.25 an hour, which has not increased since July 2009.

Similarly, farm workers do not receive the mandatory overtime rate of 1 1/2 times their regular hourly rate for all hours worked in excess of 40 hours in a week that most other working people are assured. Why are the hours that farm workers toil worth less than other working people? I am asking you to change that by supporting LD 1251.

Other states have enacted laws to provide farm workers with both minimum wage and overtime protection. Specifically, regarding just overtime, the states of California, the largest agricultural state in terms of production, Hawaii, Maryland and Minnesota have done so, as has the District of Columbia, though I am not sure how many farms there are in our nation's Capital.

I ask you to consider the Legislative findings and declarations found in California's labor laws.

"The Legislature finds and declares all of the following:

- (a) Agricultural employees engage in back-breaking work every day.
- (b) Few occupations in today's America are as physically demanding and exhausting as agricultural work.
- (c) In 1938, the United States Congress enacted the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, citations omitted, which excluded agricultural workers from wage protections and overtime compensation requirements.
- (d) It is the intent of the Legislature to enact the Phase-In Overtime for Agricultural Workers Act of 2016 to provide any person employed in an agricultural occupation in California, citations omitted, with an opportunity to earn overtime compensation under the same standards as millions of other Californians."

I note that California and other states also provides the same minimum wage to farm workers as is paid to all other working people. Those state wages are substantially higher than the stagnant federal minimum wage. Are not Maine's farm workers worthy of similar legal protections? In my mind, the answer is clearly yes. The time is right to extend the fundamental protections long contained in Maine's wage and hour laws to all of Maine's working people.

I thank you for your attention and would be happy to answer any questions you might have.
